

Notes on contributors

EDITORS:

Bogusława Dobek-Ostrowska is a professor of political science at the University of Wrocław, Poland and chair of the Department of Communication and Journalism. She is a co-founder and past president (2007–2013) of the Polish Communication Association. She is a founder and editor of the Central European Journal of Communication. She is an editor of the series Studies in Communication and Politics (Peter Lang Edition) and Politics and Communication of the University of Wrocław Press. She has published several books and articles. She is interested in political communication and media systems.

E-mail: boguslawa.dobek-ostrowska@uwr.edu.pl

Michał Głowacki, PhD, is an associate professor at the University of Warsaw, Poland. He has been involved in several large European research projects including 'Media Accountability and Transparency in Europe' and 'Journalism in Change: Professional Journalistic Cultures in Russia, Poland, and Sweden'. Michał has been awarded scholarships by the Danish Agency for Science, Technology, and Innovation, the Swedish Institute, the Research Council of Norway, and the Polish-American Fulbright Commission. His research interests are media policy, public service media, accountability, and innovation culture.

E-mail: michal.glowacki@uw.edu.pl

CONTRIBUTORS:

Márton Demeter, PhD, is an associate professor at Karoli Gaspar University of the Reformed Church in Hungary and Postdoctoral Research Fellow of the Hungarian Academy of Sciences. His main topics of interest are political communication, science communication, and global inequalities, especially in the field of international academy. His research has been published in leading periodicals of the field including International Journal of Communication, Journalism and Mass Communication Quarterly, Science and Engineering Ethics, and Publishing Research Quarterly.

E-mail: demeter.marton@gmail.com

Christina Holtz-Bacha, dr., professor, holds the Chair in Communication at Friedrich-Alexander-Universität Erlangen-Nürnberg. Her main research interests lie in the field of political communication, media systems, European media policy, and gender and media. Among her most recent publications is Political Campaigning in the Public Space. Election Posters Around the Globe (2017, co-edited with Bengt Johansson).

E-mail: christina.holtz-bacha@fau.de

Elena Johansson, PhD, is a lecturer at the School of Culture and Media sciences at Umeå University, Sweden. She also teaches at the KTH Royal Institute of Technology. In the years 2011–2017 she worked as a Researcher at the School of Social Sciences at Södertörn University. Her research focuses on political communication, professional journalistic cultures, and social media.

E-mail: elena.johansson@outlook.com

Jacek Nożewski, PhD, was a student of the University of Wrocław. He took part in many international research projects, such as “Government communication in a comparative perspective” coordinated by Södertörn University. His research interests focus on political communication, journalism, social media, technological changes in the media sectors, and user activity within social media.

E-mail: jacek.nozewski@gmail.com

Zrinjka Peruško, PhD in sociology, is professor of media sociology and mass communication at the Department for Media and Communication, Faculty of Political Science, University of Zagreb, and Founder Chair of its Centre for Media and Communication Research. She is a comparative communication scholar engaged with the analysis of media systems, media cultures, and audience dynamics in mediatization-related transformations.

E-mail: zperusko@fpzg.hr

Grażyna Stachyra, PhD in literary studies and communication in the media at the Maria Curie-Skłodowska University in Lublin, is a Lecturer in Social Communication at the UMCS University. She has published on radio genres and modus of communication in the Media, Culture & Society Journal and European Journal of Communication. She is a Vice-chair of the Radio Research Section at the European Communication Research and Education Association.

E-mail: grazyna.stachyra@poczta.umcs.lublin.pl

Dina Vozab, PhD in political science, is post-doctoral researcher and teaching assistant at the Department for Media and Communication, and the Centre for Media and Communication Research, Faculty of Political Science, University of Zagreb. Her research interests include media, civil society and political participation, media systems, non-profit media, and media audiences.

E-mail: dvozab@fpzg.hr

The Media and Democracy Karol Jakubowicz Award of the Polish Communication Association

Photo: Dr. Maria Nowina-Konopka, Christian S. Nissen i Dr. Jakub Nowak (from the right) — laureates of the first Media and Democracy Karol Jakubowicz Award with Małgorzata Semil-Jakubowicz and members of the Scientific Committee

In 2018, for the first time ever, scholars and researchers interested in the interplay between media and politics were granted the “Media and Democracy Karol Jakubowicz Award”. An award supporting research on freedom of the press, media democratisation, public service media and the role of ethics in contemporary journalism was introduced to mark the 5th anniversary of the passing away of Dr. Karol Jakubowicz (1941–2013) — one of the most prominent media scholars in Central Europe and beyond.

The idea of establishing this new award under the Polish Communication Association was introduced by Małgorzata Semil-Jakubowicz. The first edition aimed to recognise outstanding publications from 2017 and 2018; these were carefully reviewed and evaluated by members of the Scientific Committee: Iwona Hofman (Maria Curie-Skłodowska University in Lublin), Małgorzata Semil-Jakubowicz, Michał Głowacki (University of Warsaw), Alicja Jaskiernia (University of Warsaw), Beata Klimkiewicz (Jagiellonian University in Kraków), Jerzy Ołędzki (Cardinal Stefan Wyszyński University in Warsaw) and Hanna Machińska (Ombudsman).

The award ceremony took place on June 15th, 2018 in Warsaw during one of the sessions of the annual conference of the European Media Management Association. The ceremony was chaired by Gregory Ferrell Lowe (Northwestern University in Qatar), who underlined the significance of Karol’s work and his impact on European media law. Iwona Hofman — President of the Polish Communication Association, granted the “Media and Democracy Karol Jakubowicz Award” to Dr. Maria Nowina Konopka (monograph: “Infomorphosis. Information Management in New Media”) and Dr. Jakub Nowak (monograph: “Network Policy of Pop Culture”). A special prize for promoting democratic principles in the media, was given to Christian S. Nissen — Copenhagen Business School (Denmark); Director General of the Danish public broadcaster DR in 1994–2004. Nissen received this award for his contribution and achievements in debates on democracy and public service media at the European and national level.

It is believed that future editions of the “Media and Democracy Karol Jakubowicz Award” will further promote principles of democratic media in Poland and beyond.

Text: Michał Głowacki

Photo: Jarosław Królikowski

The 68th ICA Conference

Polish Communication Association Panel:

Political Executive — Media Relations in the Era of Mediatized Politics in Finland, Lithuania, Poland, and Sweden

Prague, Czech Republic, May 24–28, 2018

Photo: The participants of the panel — Gunnar Nygren, Aukse Balčytienė, Bogusława Dobek-Ostrowska, Svetlana Bodrunova, Milda Malling, Jacek Nożewski, Karl Magnus Johansson, Risto Niemikari, Elena Johansson, Tapio Raunio

A panel organized by the Polish Communication Association took place on the third day (May 26) of the Annual Conference of the International Communication Association (ICA) held at Hilton Hotels in Prague in the Czech Republic. The panel, titled “Political Executive — Media Relations in the Era of Mediatized Politics in Finland, Lithuania, Poland, and Sweden”, was chaired by Bogusława Dobek-Ostrowska (University of Wrocław, Poland), and comprised of six presentations delineating the research results stemming from a forthcoming edited volume Close and Distant: Political Executive–Media Relations in Four Countries. This book project spotlights interactions between political executives and media representatives and the case studies from Finland, Lithuania, Poland, and Sweden, built mainly on extensive interviews with political journalists and government media/political advisors, supplemented by documentary evidence. The panel also presented the themes of the volume: government communication; social media; formality and informality; mediatization of politics; and political communication culture.

The presentations included six papers: “Variations in Political Communication Culture. New Forms of Political Parallelisms and Media–Politics Coalitions” of Aukse Balčytienė (Vytautas Magnus University, Lithuania), “Journalists and Political Power–Mediatization and Political Instrumentalization” presented by Gunnar Nygren (Södertörn University, Sweden) and Risto Niemikari (University of Tampere, Finland), “Journalists and their Political Sources in Poland: Describing the Interrelationship” of Jacek Nożewski (University of Wrocław, Poland), “Formal and Informal Interaction: Power and Exchange Between Journalists and their Political Sources” presented by Milda Malling (Södertörn University, Sweden). Elena Johansson (Södertörn University, Sweden) talked about “Social Media for Top Politicians: Comparative Case Illustrations from Finland, Poland, and Sweden”. The paper “Government Communication in Comparative Perspective” of Karl Magnus Johansson (Södertörn University, Sweden) and Tapio Raunio (University of Tampere, Finland) concluded the panel.

After the presentations, the panel respondent, Svetlana S. Bodrunova from St. Petersburg State University (Russia) offered her suggestions and insights, underscoring the importance of and the need for (de-westernized) comparative research. This was followed by a short question and answer session including the audience.

Text: Marta Łysik

Photo: Jacek Nożewski

<https://www.messenger.com/t/lena.degtereva>

<https://www.facebook.com/jacek.nozewski/posts/1676905275690634>

The 11th Central and Eastern European Communication and Media Conference CEECOM 2018, Szeged, Hungary, 30th May–1st June 2018

The 11th Central and Eastern European Communication and Media Conference (CEECOM) was organized by the Department of Communication and Media Studies, and the Department of Political Science of the University of Szeged, where the conference took place, gathering around two hundred media and communication experts and guests from all around the world. It took three days to discuss the main conference topic: the diverse issues and relationships between the ‘communicative space and political space’, and to present the whole range of concepts and findings which describe the current state of research on CEE media and communication issues. The relatively dense program (34 thematic sessions, more than 140 presentations and 4 full-time keynote addresses) did not leave much time for discovering the enchantment of the town of Szeged (although the organizers planned some sightseeing attractions, such as the night baths, a wine tour, or visit to the salami Pick Museum).

Photo: Participants of CEECOM 2018

By picking the central topic set as ‘a broad spectrum of ideas related to ongoing changes and transformations of the concept of space’, the conference organizers aimed at highlighting such perspectives as those of the ‘physical political spaces as communicative spaces’, ‘mediatized spaces’, ‘social and control issues in politics and media’, ‘online / digital spaces’, and ‘the regulatory nature of politics and media’.

The conference program included four keynote speeches, encompassing different aspects of the transformation of media and journalism in Central and Eastern Europe. The first speaker was Epp Lauk, an Estonian, representing the University of Jyväskylä in Finland. In her speech, called ‘Understanding the Transformation of CEE Journalism Cultures: A Comparative View’, she tried to assess the regional processes of transformation from the point of view of broadly-defined cultural factors of change in a long comparative perspective. By pointing out that the prominent feature of journalisms cultures [the plural is intentional] in the CEE in the twentieth century has been the logic of disruption rather than continuity, and stressing that we have experienced many individual paths of change in the region so far, she challenged the sense of a rapid and imitative cultural transformation that drew — as an easy solution — from the Western model of professional standards of journalism. ‘If you are buying shoes, you don’t cut off your toes — you just choose another pair to fit your feet’, she concluded, explaining why we first should systematically learn the real social and cultural factors that shape media landscapes — like the systems of values, moral philosophies, attitudes to religion, customs and traditions etc. — to be able to describe and explain the dynamic models of journalisms in a credible way.

In this context Epp Lauk mentioned the ‘Worlds of Journalism Study’ project, a multi-dimensional empirical comparative study carried out in 67 countries, with the goal of assessing journalism around the world.

The second keynote speaker, Jérôme Monnet, represents the University of Paris-Est Marne-la-Vallée, the Paris School of Urbanism and the Laboratoire Ville Mobilité Transport. While being a stranger in Central Europe and in media and journalism studies (to quote his words), he provided really interesting insights into the main conference topic, by addressing the question of how public space can be a communicative space. Drawing many examples from his socio-urbanist studies in Los Angeles, Mexico, and Paris, he focused on urban landscapes, in order to provide meaningful instances of communication. Among others, he was illustrating how urban space itself is setting and communicating social rules, and how it is used by people to fulfill certain collective endeavors: as glorification of the past or marking one's colonial power (monumental architecture), running commercial activity, enabling social / political subversion and protest, or attributing symbolic meaning to an urban landscape.

The third speaker, Sabina Mihelj from Loughborough University, opted for intellectual provocation in her keynote titled 'A Decline of Publicness: Rethinking the Transformation of CEE Media After 1989'. Drawing from her recent project 'Screening Socialism: Television and Everyday Life in Socialist Eastern Europe' (including data from the Soviet Union, Poland, Yugoslavia, Romania, and GDR), she argued, in her words, 'in a deliberately provocative manner, that what we have witnessed in Eastern Europe since 1989 has in fact been, in some ways, the decline of publicness, which started pretty much immediately after 1989'. This decline was not limited to post-communist countries, but was defined as part of a practice of global transformation. This presentation rested on the following premises: first, the narrative used by Central Europeans to describe the essence of transformation from communism into capitalism (narrative of regaining freedom) has been too simplistic, binary, and thus obscuring understanding of real processes; second, CEE media were wrongly accused of being equal with political institutions (in fact, the media were not 'handmade of politics'); third, when we include the period after 1989 we clearly see that a unilinear process of transition is a false assumption — in fact, the communist black legacies are not relevant to analyze the CEE transition in a broader historical sense (particularly, in a logic of progress these binaries do not count); fourth, instead of using the narrative of freedom, we should use the category of publicness (in a special, narrowed sense) to understand the transformation; fifth, a good medium to test the aforementioned claims is television — its developments and functions played in post-war Europe.

The following argument is also pretty unflinching: when we do some research on television in socialist countries — we must realize that, in fact, 'contrary to common perception', the whole subsequent, post-cold war period [in CEE] 'was marked, in some respect, with the decline of publicness, or shrinking of publicness'. And further on, when we compare the (declared) functions of television, we must find out that, in the communist period, there were many systemic similarities between Western public media (like the BBC), and socialist state television and its mission. Sabina Mihelj points out that the key contrast lies 'not between communist and non-communist media, but between commercial broadcasters on the one hand, and public and communist broadcasters' on the other. It is perhaps worth stressing here, that one of the key proofs for openness and 'true publicness', and 'undeniable similarities' of the BBC and Polish television in the 1960s was... a quote from Włodzimierz Sokorski — the Polish Communist Party President of the Committee for Radio and Television (a Red Army Brigadier-General and flamboyant one), who in 1960 described the main tasks of Polish Television in the following words: 'It's our specificity to not only inform quickly and objectively, deepen human knowledge about the world, scientific discoveries, the most recent phenomena in the domain of social, economic, and political tendencies, but also to give people decent entertainment, develop their taste of culture, art, and develop their ethical (...) needs'. No wonder that Sabina Mihelj's presentation stirred some confusion among those from the audience who could remember socialist television, as well as the very absence of the public sphere in those years...

The fourth keynote speaker was András Bozóki from the Central European University in Budapest, a political scientist and author of important books on the divergent aspects of post-communist transition, European public sphere, democracy, political culture, and mechanisms of change in CEE countries. In his presentation he was analyzing the main factors and contexts that determined the nature of political discourses which have been shaping the post-communist transformation. Bozóki set off from an overview of public roles of intellectuals in the twentieth century, having assumed that discourses on the one hand, and social actors who cultivate them on the other, cannot be separated. Then, drawing from social scientific authors, he presented the whole range of public roles played by, or ascribed to intellectuals since the middle of the twentieth century. These roles can be grasped along the line from the separated from society, relatively silent seekers of universal truths, and 'organic' thinkers involved 'in observation and synthesis' (1930–1950), through professionals, then rebels after 1968, and dissidents of 1981–1990, and legislators of the early 1990s, finally down to the interpreters and social mediators now. According to András Bozóki, every one of these concepts is important to understand the political change and post-communist transformation in its divergent paths, and to reconstruct the relevant waves of public discourse.

Speaking about Hungary, but having in mind a more general application, Bozóki discerned three main political discourses which organized public understanding and social practices during the transformation after 1989: 'the liberal discourse' (critical against socialistic centralism, and fostering the consensual expression of rights and freedoms, as well as universal values of democracy), followed by 'the discourse of TINA' in the first decade of the transformation (critical against state interventions and centralism, and fostering the market freedom, capitalism, and neo-liberalism), and finally 'the national populist discourse' after the crisis of 2008–2012 (critical against elites, representative liberal democracy and traditional politics, and fostering populism, nativism, and popular sovereignty).

Apart from keynote presentations, the program of the CEECOM conference included 34 thematic sessions and more than 140 presentations. The panelists split into two groups: those who followed the central theme, and those who remained consistent with their traditional topics. Related to this issue, there were nine thematic sessions oriented to the 'communicative and political space'. Following one's duty as a chronicler, let's recall the titles: 'Political Space of Entertainment in Late Night Talk Shows and Prison Radios', 'Secular and Sacred Public spheres', 'Spaces of the nation: constructing spaces, memories, and rituals', 'Politics, Music and a Diva: Spaces of Entertainment', 'Spatial Experience and Mediated Places in Central and Eastern European Television Fiction', 'Discursive sense of place: time-space (de)compressions in the times of uncertainty', 'Activism, Communication, and Locality', 'The Politics of Space and Contemporary Media', and 'Understanding digital space beyond web analysis'. Further on, there were twenty five thematic sessions which provided the whole spectrum of the research and expert knowledge on media and communication in Central and Eastern Europe. Also from this point of view, the 11th CEECOM conference was a great success.

Finally, it is worth stressing the strength of the Polish representation, roughly counting up those who appeared to 5 chairs and 24 panelists. For the record, these thematic sessions were chaired by Michał Kuś ('Contemporary Forms of Free Speech Censorship in Europe — The Place of the State in the Media System', two parts), Bogusława Dobek-Ostrowska ('Network Citizens in Central and Eastern Europe. Communicative Political Power and Empowerment of the Digital Generation'), Bartosz Wiśniewski ('Contemporary Forms of Free Speech Censorship in Europe — The Place of the State in the Media System’), Jacek H. Kołodziej (‘Discursive sense of place: time-space (de)compressions in the times of uncertainty’) and Michał Jacuński (‘Understanding digital space beyond web analysis’). Polish panelists make the impressive list of additional 24 names — for the record (in chronological order): Waldemar Tłokiński, Bartosz Wiśniewski, Bogusława Dobek-Ostrowska, Agnieszka Szymańska, Bartłomiej Łódzki, Justyna Arendarska, Jacek H. Kołodziej, Michał Bukowski, Joanna Grzechnik, Rafał Leśniczak, Anna Adamus-Matuszynska, Piotr Dzik, Anna Sytnik, Bartosz Pietrzyk, Sylwia Męcfał, Michał Kuś, Piotr Sula, Jakub Nowak, Małgorzata Tadeusz-Ciesielczyk, Katarzyna Gad, Dominika Popielec, Michał Jacuński, Anna Szwed-Walczak, and Jan Pleszczyński.

Text: Jacek H. Kołodziej

Photo: Ferenc Halof

The 4th National Congress of Political Science, “The State in Times of Change” Lublin, September 18–20, 2018

On September 18–20, 2018, at the Marie Curie-Skłodowska University in Lublin, the 4th National Congress of Political Science was held, entitled “The State in Times of Change”. More than 700 scholars from Poland and Europe presented results of their research and participated in 124 thematic panels. The panels were dedicated among other things to political communication in Poland, the role of women in the public sphere and political science in Poland, foreign policy, political elites and political parties.

The Congress began with a speech from the keynote speaker — prof. Stefano Guzzini (Former President of the Central and East European International Studies Association), and a plenary session dedicated to the main subject of the conference. Professor Teresa Łoś-Nowak, prof. Andrzej Antoszewski, prof. Roman Kuźniar, prof. Zbigniew Czachór, prof. Alicja Stępińska-Kuczyńska, prof. Jarosław Hrycak and prof. Mirosław Karwat spoke about various aspects of understanding and studying statehood in a period of change. After the session the official opening of the Congress was held, attended by the Minister of Science and Higher Education, the Rector of UMCS, the President of the Polish Political Sciences Association, the Chairman of the Political Sciences Committee of the Polish Academy of Sciences, the Marshal of the Lublin Voivodeship, the Mayor of Lublin, and the President of the International Political Science Association.

Employees of the Central European Journal of Communication also participated in the Congress. Professor Bogusława Dobek-Ostrowska joined with dr. Paulina Barczyszyn-Madziarz, M.A. Julia Trzczińska, dr Justyna Arendarska and dr Róża Norström to present the results of an international research project made in cooperation with the George Washington University, as part of the panel entitled “The coverage of the change of the PiS government (1st December 2017/31st January 2018) in the perspective of Polish television broadcasters: between politicization and commercialization”. The researchers presented the results of the content analysis of the three most popular Polish television news programs and web portals.

The next Congress of Political Science will be held in Wrocław.

For more information please visit: <https://www.umcs.pl/pl/kongrespolitologii.htm>.

Text: Róża Norström

The Annual Conference of the European Media Management Association (EMMA): “Media Management in the Age of Big Data and High-tech” Warsaw, Poland, 14–15 June 2018

Photo: Participants of the European Media Management Association conference in Warsaw

More than 100 media scholars and practitioners from European countries and beyond (China, Iran, Japan, Pakistan) gathered in the city of Warsaw for the Annual Conference of the European Media Management Association (EMMA). The Association is one of the world's most established academic networks in the field of media economics and management. It supports advancement in media management research, scholarship, and practice throughout international conferences and its flagship publication “Journal of Media Business Studies”. In the past the annual conferences of EMMA were organised in several European cities, including Porto, Tallinn, Moscow, Budapest, London, Barcelona, Hamburg, Paris, Ghent, and Bournemouth. The first ever EMMA conference in Poland was organised on June 14th–15th, 2018 by the Faculty of Journalism, Information and Book Studies, University of Warsaw.

The goal of the 2018 EMMA conference entitled “Media Management in the Age of Big Data and High-tech” was to critically examine internal processes and structures of media and creative firms through the lenses of the ‘the fourth industrial revolution’ and ‘the second machine age’. It aimed to answer to the question of whether and how media enterprises are adapting to the age of machines. Both posters and papers accepted for presentation at the conference therefore addressed different aspects with regard to the management of the media. The list of topics included machine intelligence and machine learning, Big Data and Internet of Things, predictive analytics, behavioural targeting, data-driven personalisation, smart city, social innovation as well as topic related to EMMA special interest groups, such as media entrepreneurship, strategic media management, media policy and information technology.

The conference programme was designed to cover 20 parallel sessions and two plenary sessions dedicated to the main conference theme. During the first plenary session, entitled “Rationalising Audiences and Reconsidering Media Management” (June 14th, 2018) new models of media management were presented by Phil M. Napoli (Sanford School of Public Policy at Duke University) and Christian S. Nissen (Copenhagen Business School). The second plenary (June 15th, 2018) entitled “Roadmaps for Organisational Culture Change” offered a room to present findings from two qualitative studies conducted by Lucy Kueng (Reuters Institute, University of Oxford) and Lizzie Jackson (London South Bank University).

The European Media Management Association conference in Warsaw included several social events, such as a piano concert, city games, walk by the main Campus of Warsaw University and celebration of the 15th Anniversary of the EMMA. Prior to the EMMA 2018 Annual Conference (June 13th, 2018), the local organisers offered a new type of pre-conference called “Creative Cultures for Media Progression: An Unconference” exploring innovative cultures, values, and practices of progressive media firms, as well as new ways of organising information-sharing between participants.

Text: Michał Głowacki

Photo: Jarosław Królikowski

Call for Panel and Paper

The 12th Central and Eastern European Communication and Media Conference will be held on 19-21 June 2019 in Sofia, Bulgaria. The title of the conference is “Communication Management: Theory and Practice in the 21st Century”.

The accelerated technological changes in the field of communication are inevitably leading to significant modifications in current social practice. The clear borders between communication disciplines like public relations, advertising, and marketing are no longer the norm as contemporary tendencies in the field require an integrated communication approach by public and private entities alike. The academic frame of these alternated models of distribution and consumption of information is the primary focus of CEECOM 2019. However, the conference is open to other panel and paper submissions focusing on issues relating to communication and media practice with an emphasis on Central and Eastern Europe.

“Closed” panel proposal

You can submit a “closed” panel proposal of a maximum 500 words. Each submission should include the title and rationale for the panel, and moderator’s name, email and affiliation. Additionally, brief abstracts (up to 250 words) should be provided for each parparticipant's presentation within the panel, indicating name, email, and affiliation. Up to five participants per panel.

The call for "closed" panel submissions ends on 30th November 2018. The notifications of acceptance will be sent by 10th December 2018.

"Open" panel proposal

You can submit an "open" panel proposal of a maximum 500 words. Each submission should include the title and rationale for the panel, and moderator's name, email, and affiliation. Note that "open" panels do not include participants. Participants can apply to panels from 10th December 2018.

The call for "open" panel submissions ends on 30th November 2018. The notifications of acceptance will be sent by 10th December 2018.

Submitting a paper

Individual paper proposals addressed to one of the proposed topics or panels could mention the title of the desired panel. However, other topics regarding CEE issues, communication management, or similar, could apply and be assigned to a panel at a later point. Abstracts (maximum 250 words) will be evaluated by two members of the Scientific Committee.

Call for papers starts on 10th December 2018 and ends on 31st January 2019. The notification of acceptance will be sent by 25th February 2019.

The submission form for papers will be available from 10th December 2018 at our webpage. The panel proposals should be sent to the e-mail below. All ECREA members with an interest in the subject are invited to join the CEE Network of the organization.

<http://ceecom2019.eu/>

<https://www.facebook.com/CEECOM2019/>

ceecom2019@gmail.com

Time runs so quickly...