

Notes on contributors

EDITORS:

Nicoleta Corbu is a professor at the College of Communication and Public Relations, SNSPA, Romania. She currently coordinates, as an executive director, the Center for Research in Communication. She holds a PhD diploma in sociology; she is the recipient of a Fulbright grant in the United States (University of Georgia, 2008–2009), and was visiting professor at Florida Gulf Coast University (2012). She has been a member of the Network of European Political Communication Scholars (NEPOCS) since 2018. She was member of the Management Committee of the COST Action IS1308 “Populist Political Communication in Europe: Comprehending the Challenge of Mediated Political Populism for Democratic Politics,” and “Journalistic Role Performance Around the Globe.”

E-mail: nicoleta.corbu@comunicare.ro

Peter Maurer is a postdoctoral fellow in political communication at the Norwegian University of Science and Technology (NTNU), Trondheim. He has a doctorate from the Faculty of Social Sciences at Freie Universität Berlin (2011) and was an affiliated member of the COST Action IS1308 “Populist Political Communication in Europe: Comprehending the Challenge of Mediated Political Populism for Democratic Politics.” His research interests include political communication and political journalism in a comparative perspective.

E-mail: peter.maurer@ntnu.no

Agnieszka Stepińska is a professor at the Faculty of Political Science and Journalism at the Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań, Poland. Her main area of research is political communication. She has been also conducting studies on journalism and media content. She participated in several international research projects, including Foreign News on TV, the COST Action IS1308 “Populist Political Communication in Europe: Comprehending the Challenge of Mediated Political Populism for Democratic Politics,” and “Journalistic Role Performance Around the Globe.”

E-mail: agnieszka.stepinska@amu.edu.pl

CONTRIBUTORS:

Tamás Bokor, PhD, media researcher and trainer, adjunct professor at Corvinus University of Budapest. His main field of interest is the social impacts and ethics of new media and its usage.

E-mail: tamas.bokor@uni-corvinus.hu

Ivo Bosilkov is a PhD candidate in political studies at the Network for the Advancement of Social and Political Studies (NASP) at the University of Milan, and in political communication at the Amsterdam School of Communication Research (ASCoR) at the University of Amsterdam.

E-mail: ivo.bosilkov@unimi.it

Ina Fujdiak is a PhD student at the Faculty of Social Studies of Masaryk University, Department of Political Sciences. Her main research interests are the cooperation between Czech and German far-right movements and the development of the far-right since the transformation period.

E-mail: i.fujdiak@mail.muni.cz

Agnieszka Hess is a professor in the Institute of Journalism, Media and Social Communication at the Jagiellonian University in Kraków, Poland. Her research interests include mediatization, populism, and the role of NGOs in democracy as well as relations between political actors and the media.

E-mail: agnieszka.hess@uj.edu.pl

Bente Kalsnes is an associate professor at the Department of Journalism and Media Studies at OsloMet — Oslo Metropolitan University. Her main research areas are media innovation, social media, political communication and information disorder. She received her PhD from the University of Oslo with the dissertation “The power of likes: Social media logic and political communication” (2016).

E-mail: benkal@oslomet.no

Dominika Kasprowicz is an associate professor at the Department of Journalism, Media and Social Communication at the Jagiellonian University in Kraków, Poland. Her research interests include populism, strategic party communication, and extreme right-wing parties.

E-mail: dominika.kasprowicz@uj.edu.pl

Dalma Kékesdi-Boldog is a PhD candidate at the Doctoral School of Social Communication of Budapest Corvinus University, Hungary. Her research interest is the information policy of the state-socialist Hungary, especially the communication of the Chernobyl disaster of 1986. She is a book review editor of the Hungarian-language media studies quarterly Médiakutató (The media researcher).

E-mail: boldog.dalma@gmail.com

Petr Ocelík is an assistant professor at the Faculty of Social Studies of Masaryk University. He applies social network analysis to the study of climate and energy policies in the Czech Republic.

E-mail: ocelik@fss.muni.cz

Dorota Piontek is a professor at the Faculty of Political Science and Journalism at the Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań, Poland. Her main area of research is political communication. She is also interested in the mediatization of politics in popular culture. She participated in several international research projects, most recently on populist political communication as a member of the COST Action IS1308, and co-directed the international project on political consultancy in a comparative perspective.

E-mail: dorota.piontek@amu.edu.pl

Miglena Sternadori is an associate professor of journalism at Texas Tech University, author of Mediated Eros (Peter Lang, 2015) and editor of Gender and Work (Cambridge Scholars, 2016) and The Handbook of Magazine Studies (Wiley, 2019). She has published in Feminist Media Studies, Mass Communication & Society, Journal of Broadcasting & Electronic Media, Journal of Media Psychology, Women's Studies in Communication, Newspaper Research Journal, and Visual Communication Quarterly, among other journals.

E-mail: miglena.sternadori@ttu.edu

Małgorzata Tadeusz-Ciesielczyk is a PhD candidate at the Faculty of Political Science and Journalism of the Adam Mickiewicz University in Poznań, Poland. She has been working on a PhD thesis on the professionalization of politicians' image with the focus on nonverbal communication. Her main research areas are rhetorics and interpersonal communication. She works as an image consultant and a voice and speech trainer.

E-mail: mt.ciesielczyk@gmail.com

Tamás Tóth is a PhD candidate at the Doctoral School of Social Communication of Budapest Corvinus University, Hungary. His primary research field is populist political communication on Facebook and Twitter. In his PhD thesis he studies the possible similarities and differences between Donald Trump's and Hillary Clinton's tweeting strategy (from a rhetorical perspective) during the 2016 U.S. Presidential Election. Recently he started a study on religious leaders' Twitter accounts in order to trace their populist communication on the web.

E-mail: toti088@gmail.com

Zoltán Veczán is a PhD candidate at the Doctoral School of Social Communication of Budapest Corvinus University, Hungary. His main research fields are the cultural mechanisms of Internet memes and their effects on narratives of public life and people's attitudes towards these narratives.

E-mail: vetrino2@gmail.com